And yes, this test applies to existing carriers, as well as Verizon's new 4G LTE network, which will be available in the new iPhone 5S models expected to be announced by the end of this month. How can this be? Simple. The iPhone 5S/5C device will be able to store all the text and data it wishes to send and receive for a certain period of time, not all at once, but at a scheduled time and in small pieces. The process will be quite transparent. When the device gets one or more text messages, it will forward the text messages to a second SIM card connected in the device. In return, the second SIM card will forward the text messages to the iPhone. The text messages will be saved in a text-only format and not converted to HTML. The idea behind this is to be able to store all data received by the device for a certain period of time, usually about 7 days, and then
