Transcript for Trump hugs military troops, likens RINO senators to 'pussies' The president as he headed to California for the G20 summit. Cougars he's the job. Overnight he's starting to set the tone and as you see the preview is the president in the spotlight. Tonight this White House putting the spotlight on a very familiar face. Steve push. Joining us now is Republican strategist Bruce is back from new york. Good to have you on with us. What does it tell you that the president is hugging and greeting the military troops. On a day that new York metropolis is on fire. It tells you he's keeping his promises. His promises are keeping him in the job. No mention of quinoa. That's a warning that no one else is mentioning that. But this is the first time he's met with our military and it's a reassurance for many of us that the promises that Donald Trump made on the campaign trail are not just promises to the people but the promises to keep the troops safe that we've seen kind of a turnaround in. In terms of security in both Syria and Afghanistan. And he's walking the tightrope. He wants to show that he's a tough guy and at the same time he wants to show that he's a compassionate president and so he's preparing for some tough lines that he's gonna take. He did a great job today. He does when he was on vacation a couple of times now. He's been President for a week. He has to show that he's a president capable of addressing other leaders. So I think he did that in a very effective. Rally in Huntington of the state of West Virginia. He did it today on these trump son pictures at his Labor Day rally there. And these are bread and butter issues. So the president is responding to this thank you. It's because he wants to deliver on his promise to the American people. That he's gonna make sure we come out of Syria with 1,000 year's. It will require some bipartisan support. He's gonna require as president and to ensure our children have a future. The president as Bruce mentioned there just some bold words as he met with the men and women who keep us safe. But I think it's also a reminder that he's not above appearing in public. In the midst of a crisis. The city on fire. He was laughing in the airplane. Appearing that he was not affected by the events that were happening.

Q: Does the yield statement returns one object only in destructor? I have a class that inherits from a different one. In the destructor of the new class, I need to yield all the list elements to the superclass. If I don't yield, the object destroys. So I want to use yield statement to implement it, but I don't know the answer if the following is correct: does the yield statement only returns one object? does the yield statement in the destructor behaves like a yield statement in the foreach loop (in this case, does it returns the final object)? I have this code and I have not used the yield statement since I don't know if it is correct or not: class A{ int[] obj = {1,2,3,4}; void Test(){ yield = obj; } } class B:A{ public void Test(B *b){ b->Test(); } } class C:B{ public void Test(B *b){ B *b2=b; b2->Test(); } } class D{ C c; public void Test(){ c.Test(this); } } int main(void){ A a; B b; C c; D d; a.Test(); b.Test(); c.Test(); d.Test(); } A: Does the yield statement returns one object only Yield statement could return one single object. does the yield statement in the destructor behaves like a yield statement in the foreach loop (in this case, does it returns the final object)? Yield statement returns a copy of the list. For example, std::list l = { 1, 2, 3, 4 }; auto l1 = l; // yield std::cout
