I added these attributes to the AuditedAttribute class: [EdmTypeAttribute(NamespaceName="System.Runtime.Serialization, Version=4.0.0.0, Culture=neutral, PublicKeyToken=b77a5c561934e089", Name="Audited")] [DataMemberAttribute(Order = 1, IsAudited = true)] public int ID { get; set; } [DataMemberAttribute(Order = 2, IsAudited = true)] public string Description { get; set; } As you can see the data member attributes are set to IsAudited = true so when I serialize this class to XML with the DataContractSerializer and put it into the database it will preserve the attribute values. My problem is that when I am retrieving the data back out I am using the EntityDataReader, but the EdmTypeAttribute is ignoring the DataMemberAttribute and it is throwing an exception because the DataMemberAttribute is not recognized. Question is, is there a way to tell the EdmTypeAttribute to use the DataMemberAttribute? I want the audited values to be the only ones serialized and the non-audited to be ignored, so I do

Preview — The ineffable Alvaro In the US, we pretty much know what we're getting when we open our pockets and go to the store. There are the major chains — such as WalMart, CVS, and Walgreens — and they're probably what we'll reach into our pockets and take out. They are often discounted further if you buy them in bulk, making them even more affordable and convenient. It's not that you can't find some of these in the UK — it's that you can't find them anywhere. Viz Media's Bulletproof Vash, is a crossover series between Boku No Hero Academia and Ayashi no Ceres. To me, it doesn't really provide anything new or exciting, as this seems like a sort of retcon to me. I'm not really interested in that but if the story continues, I would probably be interested to see what happens with Ceres and Speedo, as I have a soft spot in my heart for her. Israel to start excavations around Dead Sea on Monday Published duration 21 October 2015 image copyright AFP image caption The search for the cave is part of the David Livingstone expedition Israel is starting an archaeological dig near the Dead Sea to search for the tomb of an 18th Century missionary. US archaeologist Professor Dan Bahat's team was due to start the excavation on Monday in a cave beside the Sea of Salt, on the Israel-Jordan border. He was one of two American archaeologists and a team of local Bedouin diggers who have been searching for the cave for months. In 1848 David Livingstone discovered the cave, where he said he had encountered a Biblical character called Adam. "We have done everything possible to help and spare the environment," Prof Bahat told AP news agency on Sunday. Search failed But he said the team was "sad" to discover that the cave where the man was believed to have been buried had been lost. The cave is located next to a rock formation called "Adam's Limestone" which he described as "a huge amphitheatre filled with breathtakingly wild and beautiful scenery". During the UK-based Livingstone's time digging at the cave, he claimed that he had witnessed a man named Adam who was around 850 years old. He also said that he had witnessed two Biblical figures who were leading people to realise that the New Testament contained the Book of Genesis. But despite the search for the cave's original location being rediscovered in 1992, the dig has continued. The team was still certain that the site could not lie in the immediate area of the salt lake but was exploring other possible locations. image copyright AP image caption The Amman-Kasrein border is marked by large rocks at the Dead Sea Mosaic map The dig has also yielded a number of Samaritan vestiges and records indicating that the Samaritans lived in the area more than 2,000 years ago. "All of this fills me with wonder in a very new and optimistic way," professor Bah
